GPNs are the bedrock of the health and care system

There's no denying that general practice nurses are the bedrock of the health and care system and they are central to the way it operates. They are often the first person that people see when they begin their journey through the system.

Analysis: the forgotten frontline

IMPORTANT READ

Primary care and community nurses are integral to the healthcare system and the fight against Covid-19. But their importance is being overlooked. General practice was thrust into the spotlight in December last year as surgeries started to receive Covid-19 vaccinations for the NHS's biggest ever inoculation programme.
